Determined To Stop Rowdism at Morrisville

MORRISVILLE, July 8—Determined to break up the practice of men and women coming here from Trenton, getting drunk and creating a disturbance, Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan has issued a warning to all offenders that he will impose a jail sentence on them unless the practice is broken up at once.

"The residents of Morrisville will not put up with this nuisance and they don't have to put up with it," the Justice stated. "There have been many complaints and the police are instructed to arrest all offenders and bring them in."

Early Saturday morning Mrs. Lena Lenox, of Trenton, was arrested by Chief of Police Albert Cooper after she became disorderly on North Delaware avenue.

PRESIDENTIAL REQUEST BRINGS SHARP COMMENT

Asks Passage of Coal Bill
Despite Doubt As To Constitutionality

DEMOCRATS DEFEND IT

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 8—President Roosevelt's request for passage of the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, despite doubt as to its constitutionality, today brought sharp comment from Republicans and vigorous defense from Democratic members of Congress.

The President's statement of position, made in a letter said that a further court decision on the control of industry by Congress would be helpful in charting future policies.

Representative Fish of New York demanded that the President submit constitutional questions to distinguished lawyers, while Representative Sabbath, Democrat of Illinois, Dean of the House, applauded the President's position as fair and reasonable.

Find Colored Man Naked Sitting On Front Porch

MORRISVILLE, July 8—State police were called when a colored man, naked, was seen walking through the fields in the Penn Valley section. The man, who later gave his name as Theodore Harrod, Fieldsboro, N. J., was found by the police sitting on the porch of the residence of Fred Kayser.

Harrod, without a piece of clothing on his person, trod the fields, and then apparently tiring went to the Kayser porch and sat down. Neighbors called State Police at Morrisville and Trooper Pebble responded. Finding the man without any clothes, Trooper Pebble hunted for a pair of old overalls in which he garbed his prisoner.

Harrod was taken to the Morrisville jail but efforts to find what he had done with his clothing and what he was doing in the neighborhood were unsuccessful. He was committed to the county jail for 15 days.

HOMES IN GERMANY ARE BEING REMADE FOR AIR WAR DEFENCE; MILLIONS ENROLLED FOR DRILLS AGAINST ATTACKS BY MEANS OF GAS AND BOMBS

Populace of Cities and Towns Instructed in What Moves to Take Should Occasion Arise; Prepara for Fine Defense
Should Peace of the Area Be Menaced

An International News Service staff correspondent takes up from Berlin the account begun from Paris of the preparations for aerial war horrors. This is the fourth of a series of dispatches from European capitals detailing the dramatic story of the mobilization of whole populations for the coming struggle.

By PIERRE J. HUSS

International News Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1935, International News Service)

BERLIN, July 8—(INS)—Cognizant of the devastating destructiveness of modern air raids, German air chiefs are seeking to prepare cities on a vast defensive scale able to cope with this danger.

Minute and systematic organization is resorted to in combatting the effects of a raid, which in order to be successful would have to penetrate a veritable ring of steel in the form of anti-aircraft defense built around each large city.

The German Air Defense League, with headquarters in Berlin and claiming several million voluntary members, has complete charge of protective measures. Since 1933 that organization has campaigned feverishly to instruct the public in the dangers of air attacks, its accompanying danger of fire, use of the gas mask, etc.

Berlin itself is the best example of the systematic care with which German cities will be protected against air raiders in case of war. The capital is divided into 20 "air defense districts," which coincide with police administrative districts. 20 police officers and Air League officers are trained to co-operate as much as possible in the event of air attack.

Gigantic sirens installed at strategic points warn the capital that an enemy air force is winging towards it. The

PACIFISM INVITES DESTRUCTION

(New York American)

All Americans want peace.

But a policy of pacifism does not mean peace.

It means war.

Unpreparedness invites attack and in armed conflict the unprepared are destroyed.

The world is now witnessing with dismay the absorption of China by Japan.

In a short time a small vigorous nation of sixty-five million people will have absorbed an immense decadent nation of four hundred million.

Then China, the greatest unit of population in the world, will be owned, dominated, directed and employed by its master Japan.

How will these four hundred million people plus the sixty-five million of Japan be employed?

For purposes of the further conquest of Asia no doubt, and eventually as a menace to the supremacy of the white races.

The immediate question, however, is how can a nation of four hundred million be absorbed and appropriated by a nation of sixty-five million.

The answer is simple.

CHINA IS AN EXAMPLE OF THE RESULTS OF PACIFISM AND COMMUNISM.

China is exhausted by class conflict within.

China has no adequate defense against hostility from without.

Every animal has some means of defense.

If it has not it is the prey of other animals.

Every plant has means of defense.

If it has not it is absorbed by its enemies.

The fish of the sea, the birds of the air, the insects, the reptiles, the highest and lowest forms of life MUST PROVIDE MEANS OF DEFENSE OR PERISH.

Human beings are not different.

Nations are not different.

Think what the criminals would do to our cities if we did not have a police force.

Think what thieves and murderers would do to ourselves and our families if we did not have police protection.

Think of the destruction of fire to our property and to our lives if we did not have fire fighters to defend us from it.

Merely disapproving of crime does not eliminate it.

PHILADELPHIA MAN DROWNS AS HE GOES CLOTHED INTO CREEK

Morris Handschuh, 45, Bet
Water Was Not So Very Deep, is Report

BODY QUICKLY FOUND

Rescue Squad Works Three Hours in Effort to Revive Victim

A Philadelphia man walked to his death last evening when he waded into the Neshaminy Creek fully clothed except for his shoes.

The man, identified as Morris Handschuh, 46, 2347 North Marshall street, Philadelphia, is reported to have gone into the creek on a bet. Many rumors circulated about the tragedy but they lacked confirmation.

A man who said he was Ernest Weager, and stated he had come to an outing with Handschuh said the two had been at the scene but a short while previous to the drowning which occurred off the shore in front of the property formerly occupied by the Schilling House, between Croydon and Newportville.

Handschuh is reported to have bet that he could walk across the creek with his clothes on, during a discussion about the depth of the water. Before anyone could prevent him he had tossed off his shoes and waded into the creek. He went under when about 30 feet from shore. It is presumed he was caught in a "suck" hole which is in the locality and at the spot where a Philadelphia youth went under last summer.

The Bucks County Rescue Squad was called and responded with a crew and their ambulance. The Rescue Squad with their new respirator worked nearly three hours in an effort to revive the man. Men worked in relays giving artificial respiration. Physicians were in attendance and for a time thought there were hopes of reviving the victim.

Edward Hibbert, Robert Porter and Joseph Laws were in charge of the Rescue Squad and remained at the scene from nine o'clock until midnight.

Bucks County Coroner Dr. John J. Sweeney and Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young were both summoned and had the body removed to the morgue of the H. S. Rue Estate, here, to await a claimant.

Crowds lined the banks of the creek and the Newportville Road watching efforts at resuscitation. Men, women and children milled about the scene until the body was removed. Highway patrolmen kept the roadway open as the curious were attracted to the spot and parked along the Newportville Road.

Handschuh's body was claimed early today by his brother-in-law, who stated that the victim was the father of nine children.

LIQUOR LAW PRISONERS

One of the stock arguments against prohibition in its hey-day was that it was jamming the jails with law breakers. But department of justice figures show that additions to federal prison population were roughly 10,000 a year in the years immediately preceding repeal, and 10,656 in the fiscal year 1934-35. The proportion of liquor law violators to others in the latter year was about four to six, compared with an approximately 50-50 split in most years of the preceding five.

Penal statistics are, of course, no accurate measure of the effects of either prohibition or regulation of the liquor traffic. They are presently useful only as indicating the extent to which authority is undertaking, under regulation, to exercise powers which were so largely permitted to be dormant in the prohibition era. The legalization of the traffic, upon which severe taxation is imposed, has by no means removed the premium on law breaking.

The fact that under repeal Uncle Sam is sending nearly as many liquor law violators to jail as he did under prohibition suggests merely proportionately greater enforcement zeal. And there is a difference between trying to compel compliance with a law which has general public support and enforcement of one with which a large body of public opinion was unsympathetic.

PLAIN MUD ROADS

Most people have the idea that this country is pretty well equipped with good roads. At any rate, they would say that most of the roads that are really important have been improved. Anyone who wants to go anywhere has access to an improved highway.

But this is a big country and a lot of people live in it. Some statistics have been issued recently that indicate the nation's road-building program may be on for a good while yet and to good purpose. One of the national farm organizations has been making special appeal to the government for a large share of federal funds to be used in improving farm-to-market roads.

And this is the startling statement backing its plea: There are in all 3,065,000 miles of highway in the United States. Of these, 422,582 miles are on federal and state systems. And of the remainder, 564,000 miles have had the benefit of some form of improvement. These are township roads and county roads.

But if the total of all the road mileage at all improved is subtracted from all the miles of road in the country, there remain about 2,000,000 miles of just plain mud road, and living on these are the country folk on about 4,000,000 farms.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol, Jan. 1, 1874. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

Attleboro is agitating the question of a passenger railroad to run from that place to Bristol or Schenck's station. An engineer has made the preliminary examination of the proposed route, and formed rough estimates of its probable cost. It is said that the grades are very light and that the road can be built at a comparatively small cost. The chief outlay will be in procuring the right of way. The plan spoken of is to run dummy engines and carry passengers and light freight. This is an enterprise that Bristol should be greatly interested in. If the road is constructed to this place, it will bring a great deal of trade here. If allowed to go to Schenck's, the trade will likely be diverted to Philadelphia. We suggest for the benefit of Bristol, that our business men do what they can to ensure the terminus of the road at this point.

Emmor Comly has presented us with specimens of Pennsylvania and Maryland currency over one hundred years old. The engraving upon them is not so artistically executed as upon the greenback of the present day. Counterfeits are reminded in bold faced type that "To Counterfeit is Death." The signatures of Agm. Usher, John Field, and Ch. Meredith are attached to the Pennsylvania note, and Wm. Eddis and J. Chapman to the Maryland one.

The Doylestown Improvement Company saved their charter by organizing on the 9th of December. The incorporators met and elected John L. DuBois, president, and Henry T. Darlington, secretary and treasurer. Since then $15,000 stock has been promised as the result of a partial canvass for the construction of "a large hall capable of holding 800 people," six stores, a market space on the first story, and two commodious lodge-rooms on the third. The company have purchased the Barndt Hotel property for $12,000. The incorporators have decided not to commence building until $20,000 stock has been secured.

The Rev. Thomas A. Pernley, of Philadelphia, preached the morning and evening sermons in the M. E. Church last Sunday to a large and interested audience. The contributions both morning and afternoon were liberally donated to liquidate the debt of the Sunday School, and other expenses incurred by repairing the church. The total amount of the church debt was $3,000; one thousand of which has been incurred by the Sunday School. The total amount now subscribed is about $1,000 for the Sunday School, thus leaving clear of debt one of the most handsome and comfortable Sunday School rooms in the county.

WARMINSTER—On Saturday last

John Bothwell was buried in the cemetery of the Neshaminy churches. He was in the 86th year of his age, and was a soldier in the war of 1812, belonging to Capt. Purdy's Rifle Company, and for nearly two years he has received a pension of eight dollars per month. There are only three of the above named company still living, viz., John Davis, of Davisville, aged 84; William Long, of Hartsville, aged 78; Joseph Carrell, of Warminster, aged 81.

PROSPECTVILLE—The Stony Creek Railroad is announced to run its first trains over the rails on Thursday, New Year's Day, and a free ride is promised all who make their appearance upon the occasion. This road furnishes a connection between Norristown and Doylestown, the county seats of Montgomery and Bucks counties, and will pay heavily from the first, being operated by a road that understands and appreciates the public wants.

Last Sunday afternoon, Mr. Jesse B. Mears, superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School, was the recipient of an elegant silver ice pitcher presented him by the members of the school. Mr. David Allen made the presentation speech, to which Mr. Mears responded, heartily, thanking the donors for the beautiful gift.

Mohican Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, will give a banquet at Cabela's Hall, on Monday evening next. An address will be delivered by Rev. Mr. Hendrickson, of Philadelphia, and a good time is looked for by the members of the tribe.

PACIFISM INVITES DESTRUCTION

Merely hoping against fire does not prevent it. MERELY DENOUNCING WAR DOES NOT END IT. We must defend ourselves against evils. We must have the means of defense.

If we are divided among ourselves—
If we are the victims of internal conflicts—
If we fail to realize that "in union there is strength," and that preparedness is the "most effectual means of preventing war"

WE WILL INVITE WAR.
WE WILL INSURE DESTRUCTION.

If we are to protect our people, our country, our civilization, ourselves, we must have the means of defense. Otherwise we will go the way of pacifist China. Otherwise we will lose all that we possess and all that we have been able to contribute to the progress of the world.

FASHION PARADE

By Margaret Garrahan

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK — (INS) — Presently you're going to be hearing, reading, seeing and sleeping furs . . .

First of all, we think, you're going to hear a lot about swaggers because there's a regular avalanche of them stocked off in the furriers' corners. Of five typical short coats, for instance—and short coats are expected to be THE big craze this Fall, each and every one's a swagger. There's a black Persian lamb, all militaristic with a huge backward flare, big rolling standup collar and pointed yoke . . . a very swanky gray Persian that flares all the more because it hugs the waist like nobody's business (this buttoned high with a flat pointed collar) . . . and a kaffa-colored flat caracul that's ultra entrancing with a high belt, slightly bloused waist and round standup collar.

Also we saw a knee-length mink (vertical treatment makes it especially smart) with a big pointed club collar and wide revers that'll button up closely to keep you good and warm on icy-cold days or flop open with oh-such casualness when it's warmish, and a moleskin featuring extra backfulness gathered to a high yoke. One of the more daring formal wraps is a drape-y cape of horizontal bands of ermine, almost twice as long in back as front, with vertical bands of sable making up the entire front and its little standup collar. A tiny bow of ermine sits perkily at the front.

Generally swaggers and princess lines prevail (the latter if you're a smart little girl—because there's been so much swaggers) with sleeves running to lots of fullness. Almost any number of the wide, caught-at-the-wrist type appears in the more sporty things. Another new theme is leg o' mutton sleeves, and the full bell ones continue full blast. Collars for the most part are either very small, with such things as rippling revers under them, or medium-size with a novel bent and convertible no end. Muffs due back, too, particularly as complements to the leg o' mutton sleeves—a combine especially good this year in Alaska sealskin or Persian lamb. This last, by the way, is expected to click with the younger 'uns . . .

WHOSE WIFE? A CYRUS K. MANTEL MURDER MYSTERY

by CLADYS SHAW ERSKINE AND IVAN FIRTH

CHAPTER XLI

"Roger," she said to one of the jurors. "Roger, what did you do with Millie? Tell me, Roger. I won't tell. Tell me, Roger!"

Her head rose and she swept the paralyzed room with a stately glance, pitifully proud.

"I am Mrs. Roger Thornley," she announced. "Mrs. Roger Thornley! Yes, I'll remember, Roger . . . but I can't remember that I'm supposed to be Millie. I'm Isabel—Isabel McKenzie Vane! I'm Isabel. Roger? What did you do with Millie? I always liked Millie. You didn't hurt her, did you, Roger?"

There was a pause—then she smiled through taut lips: "You beast! You fiend! You ghoul! That head—that head that in your suitcase! Oh, my God!"

Her voice rose to a shriek, and a woman fainted in the tense crowd. "Oh! My God! It's Millie's head! It's Millie's head! Roger? Don't kick me!"

She flung her arms above her head and sobbed. "Don't hit me again, Roger, don't hit me!"

Pandemonium broke out in the court room. It took the attendants some moments to restore order.

"Don't do that!" A man's sharp voice rang out in the room. There was a stare, and one of the spectators and a police officer subdued Roger Thornley, livid, clutching in his hand a revolver.

"Hold that man," ordered the Judge. "Order in the court, or I'll have it cleared! Stand up, Mr. Vane."

Lawrence Vane, beads of perspiration standing out on his pale forehead, stood up.

"Speak to this woman!" ordered the Judge.

Vane stepped forward, his eyes deep with pity.

"Isabel?" he murmured softly. "Isabel?"

Slowly she drew her arms away from their defensive position over her head. She looked at him for a long tense moment, walked forward and touched him softly with one finger—then she laughed softly.

"Roger," she said. "You can be nice when you want to, Roger—but most of the time you're a beast. Get out! You're drunk, Roger! I wish to God I hadn't come away with you, Roger! You're no good! Just plain rotten!"

Vane turned away, and the judge motioned Turnbull to step near her. The D. A. did so, with distaste.

She stared at him, then said: "Well, Roger, why don't you say something? I suppose you've got another woman, now—is that it? And will you kill me as you did poor Millie?"

Her voice rose again in agony, and she turned and stumbled from one man to another in the fenced-in enclosure.

"Oh! Roger!" she shrieked. "For God's sake, don't kill me! I won't tell anyone about Millie. I swear I won't! Don't kill me!"

She covered beneath the jury box, arms uplifted in the pitiful gesture of self-protection.

"Don't hit me again with that, Roger," she begged. "Oh, don't!"

The Judge signaled the two attendants who had come in with the poor mad woman to take her up and care for her. Then he said:

"Car anyone else in this court room identify this woman?"

Betty Potter rose—also Wilbur Renton, the wide-eyed Bobbie Nichols, Cyrus K. Mantel, Dr. Otto Lippenbach, Lawrence Vane, the queer old mother, who had made the mistake in her almost unknown daughter's body, Suky, and Gerry Gordon.

The Judge raised his arm, and all the formality of the law dismissed the case against Lawrence Vane.

Roger Thornley he remained to the Tombs for contempt of court, carrying concealed weapons, and for investigation on other unnamed counts.

As they led Thornley out, a small hand object dropped to the floor, and fell at the feet of some of the gaping watchers. It rolled a little way, and came to a stop.

The man, near whose foot it stopped, stooped and picked it up. He held it in his hand and stared at it in puzzlement.

It was the head of a man doll, carved out of some soft, yellow substance. The neck had been severed cleanly from the body with a silken cord, which still adhered to the head. As he studied it, he looked up, and his eyes met the hooded ones of the old black woman, who had laughed the day before.

Her whole face was alight, and she had her hands raised in jubilant attitude, high above her head.

"Great Day in de mawnin'" he heard her murmur to herself. And then she doubled up and rocked in silent laughter. "Hallelujah, Lawd!"

The crowd still milled about outside the court room, discussing the various phases of the case.

Betty was just about to leave with Cyrus K. and the still dazed Vane when a note was handed to her by a boy from her office.

Every ray in town has story in Isabel Vane. You get first interview with free Vane or don't come back.

She read it, glanced up at him where he stood beside her, then with glad mischief in her eyes, silently handed him the note.

He read it, folded it and tore it across. Then, in answer to her gesture and questioning look, he said steadily:

"Betty, I can hardly think straight yet, but I can think straight in one thing at least, because it isn't new to me. I think it's always been with me, and I know it always will be. But your editor is wrong. I'm not free—at least not so free as I must be before I can tell you of this thing that I've always known."

She flushed and her eyes wavered beneath his ardent gaze, but did not drop.

"Yes?" she murmured softly. Both seemed to have forgotten the presence of Cyrus K. who watched them with kindly, humorous eyes.

"Betty," Vane said. "I'll give you a scoop, on one condition!"

"Well, don't be so tantalizing," she chided. "Go on, tell me the scoop, and the condition. I'll agree to it if I can."

"I'll give you the scoop if you'll agree to publish the second scoop the very moment I can give it to you. Will you?"

Her flush deepened, but the dimples at the corner of her mouth were riotous.

"I promise," she said. "What's the scoop?"

He took her note book and pencil and wrote.

"Lawrence Vane takes steps to make his freedom absolute. Seeks annulment from insane Isabel on grounds her being drug addict and derivation. Vane makes arrangements for her permanent care in private insane asylum."

He handed her the note book and still held the pencil, looking at her as though in doubt.

"And what's the second scoop I'm to print?" she teased to hide her quiver.

"I think Cyrus K. Mantel can tell you that," Vane said slyly, his eyes alight with some happy thought of his own.

"Uncle Cyrus?" she turned to that gentleman. "Does he know? Have you two been conspiring?"

"I don't exactly know, Bet," said Cyrus K. "But I can make a very good guess, yes, a very good one."

He looked from one radiant young face to the other and reaching out took the book from Betty's hand, then took the pencil from Vane's.

He wrote:

"The People's Press is the first to announce the engagement of its staff correspondent Miss Betty Potter to Mr. Lawrence Vane, the famous artist. Mr. Cyrus K. Mantel, a detective slightly known around town, gave his niece away."

"There, my dear!" he said, handing the note to Betty. "That's what this boy has in mind, and it's better that you should know now and not bother me about it any more. I'm a very busy man, a very busy man."

And he turned and walked away chuckling to himself, leaving the two young people staring into each other's eyes.

Suddenly Betty said:

"Heavens! I must get this scoop into the paper right away, Lawrence."

"Does that mean that you will print the second one?" he begged.

"Wait till the time comes, sir," she said, saucily. "But you know it must be right because Uncle Cyrus wrote it, and Uncle Cyrus never makes a mistake."

FASHION PARADE

By Margaret Garrahan

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK — (INS) — A 20,000-mile, all-weather vacation trip with only 55 pounds of luggage? We thought it couldn't be done... but Writer Claudia Cranston did it. Armed with only a suitcase and a hat box she trekked all over South America by plane for three months, touching 33 ports and every country, in addition to Haiti, Guatemala, Central America and the West Indies... and presently is engaged in writing about it for Good Housekeeping.

A basic color scheme of black-and-white in chiffon and other easy-to-pack, minimum-space-requiring silks was her secret. For formal afternoons and dinners she took two black chiffons and a hand-blocked print, all ankle-length, and for evenings a velvet cape (suitable for day, too), a short red velvet wrap and five gowns—a black lace, a white chiffon, a white organdie, a pink lace and a black-and-white checked gingham with a white pique jacket. For tropical daytime she had three peasant embroidered white voile dresses, a seersucker and a plain white crepe shirt-waist, and for metropolitan daytime, a black crepe and a black-and-white printed sheer.

Undies were all light silk—for quick washings—and for strictly private moments she carried a pair of balbrigan pjs, some simple silk nighties, black satin mules and a rose and black satin negligee. Shoes included two pairs of black calf for walking, two pair of white, one pair of black satin pumps, one pair of black crepe slippers, and, for evening, one pair each of red satin and gold kid. Hats were a black silk pillbox, a white ballbunt, a large black ballbunt (formal), and a white sports straw. Hose to the tune of 18 pairs, 18 hankies and five handbags completed the layout. She traveled in a black lightweight wool suit with a black jacket topped by a black felt cloche and carried an enormous topcoat of brilliant plaid with a steamer-rug look.

Of course we didn't pop around to weigh her stuff and make sure about that 55 pounds; neither did we assemble a similar pack. If you're a Doubting Thomas you can do it yourself... but herewith, just the same, are a lot of good tips for the vacation-bound gal who simply can't see carting around a lot of paraphernalia and risking her two-weeks' fun with headaches.

Homes in Germany Being Remade for Air War Defence

Air Defense League has erected sufficient observation posts throughout the country to keep on the track of any air invader by listening and other instruments, and every activity of enemy planes within the country is moment by moment reported to headquarters.

As soon as sirens wail the alarm, whole squadrons of emergency cars roar through the capital like helter-skelter fire brigades to emphasize the warning. If it is night-time, Berlin is “blackened out” in less than a few minutes, leaving only the pale blue lamps to guide the way through important traffic lanes.

Every train, car, ship, cyclist and radio beacon fades out or dims headlights to the point of faint showing, while lights in movies and theaters are snuffed out automatically. Under the guidance of League officials, should the raid be imminent, the thousands of Berliners are being trained to beat it quickly but in orderly manner for their assigned bomb and gas-proof shelters. Air League officials appear as if by magic, one each in front of apartment houses, and supervise the evacuation.

Where exploding bombs have started a fire, Air League officials signal to “fire fighting squads” quartered in each district—usually on the roofs—and they jump into action to prevent the spread of the fire to adjacent blocks or buildings. These squads are dressed in gas-proof suits and are equipped with shovels, blasting dynamite, axes and modern foam extinguishers.

Every attic in the city has been thoroughly inspected from time to time to make sure that trash and junk has not collected there, including old furniture, mattresses and old family trash. Wherever possible, League officials are encouraging house owners to reinforce their roofs.

German citizens are receiving regular instructions in how to make cellars gas and bomb-proof. Sample shelters housing scores have been installed in many city districts, all amply supplied with gas masks, first aid kits and relief for those caught in a gas attack.

As soon as the enemy force has disappeared, into the streets march “cleaning squads” fitted out in rubber suits and gas masks. Their duty is to stop any gas leakages from gas tubes torn by bombs, to wash the streets with special chemicals in order to disperse the lingering poison fumes, and to remove anything from the streets of dangerous nature, such as dud bombs and shells. Rescue squads meanwhile are digging into the debris of fallen houses and collapsed tunnels to help or bring out those below.

Those in gas and bomb-proof shelters are not permitted to come out until police and League officials have tested the air and give a distinctive series of siren shrieks asserting that “all's clear,” especially of gas fumes.

Like all large cities, Berlin within a radius of some 60 miles is encircled by battery after battery of anti-aircraft, and a number of air bases will empty themselves of air fighters the moment the signal is given. Reichsminister Hermann Goering, General of Fliers, is in command of anti-aircraft forces.

This series will be continued tomorrow.
